

BROADCASTS GO DIGITAL IN '09

Users of older TV's and those with antennas will need converter boxes.

On Feb 17, 2009 analog TV transmission will end. After that date, TV broadcasting will be digital (DTV). Currently most TV stations are broadcasting in analog and digital. If you receive TV reception over the air using a rooftop antenna or rabbit ears, your TV could go dark on Feb. 17, 2009. You don't need to buy a new TV. Analog TV's will continue to work if you get a converter box. The United States Congress has directed the Department of Commerce to set up a program that will allow households to obtain coupons that can be applied toward the purchase of digital to analog convert boxes.

For more information you can go to the Federal Communication Commission's DTV information web site: www.dtv.gov
